Ethical considerations are central to linguistic research, including work with digital data. In this ISLE Online Forum, the panelists will share their perspectives on research ethics, drawing from their own experiences in designing and conducting research studies in linguistics. The discussion will explore:

- What ethical challenges do linguistic researchers encounter, and how can they be addressed?
- How are research ethics regulated at different institutions (in different regional settings), and should digital research face a different kind of oversight?
- What advice should novice researchers follow when conducting online research?
